The sun, unlit

Trading desks call a venue lit when everyone can see its order book, and dark when no one can.

A few times a decade, somewhere on Earth, the moon covers the sun exactly. For a few minutes it's night at noon: the stars come out and the light becomes a ring.

unlit is that moment for your trade. It happens in daylight, on a public chain, and nobody sees its face.

The mark is the eclipse: an empty disc, drawn only by the light around it.

Totality never lasts longer than 7 min 32 s.
